NOTE SENT TO U.N. SECRETARY GENERAL U. THANT

Havana PRENSA LATINA in Spanish 0248 GMT 15 May 1964--E (FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY)

(Excerpts) United Nations--Juan Juarbe Juarbe, counsellor and charge d'affaires of the Cuban mission to the United Nations, on Thursday night delivered to the organizations' secretariat general a note dated 14 May 1964 from Cuban Minister Raul Roa to Secretary General U Thant. The note says textually:

His Excellency U Thant, U.N. Secretary General, New York: Mr. Secretary General: Pursuant to instructions from the Revolutionary Government of Cuba, I address myself to you to set forth the following:

1--On 23 April of this year I sent you a note on behalf of my government in which I told you of the situation created by the continued aggressions against our country's sovereignty in the form of violations of our skies by U.S. military planes and the dangers to peace ensuing from those illegal, aggressive acts.

2--Even before the Cuban Government received a formal reply from you concerning that note, the following facts have occurred:

A. On a key off the northern coast of Pinar del Rio Province, a cache of arms, explosives, and other war materiel of U.S. manufacture was found, consisting of nine metal cases and eight drums containing the following: (list of materiel, with serial numbers, omitted--ed.)

The origin of the weapons, explosives, and war materiel is unequivocally betrayed by the marks, numbers, containers, and instructions in English on the box housing them. They are all of U.S. manufacture. It is the same kind of materiel that the Central Intelligence Agency uses in its international misdeeds and the destination of the weapons is identical to that of the many shipments previously seized in Cuban territory.

B. On 13 May, at about 1:00 a.m., a pirate ship of the Rex type, which the Central Intelligence Agency operates from its bases in Florida, Puerto Rico, and Central America, attacked with cannon fire and machineguns the Luis F. Carracedo sugar mill at Pilon port in southwestern Oriente Province. As a result of this firing, sugar warehouses were set afire and 70,000 sacks of sugar that had been refined in the mill during the present harvest were consequently lost. Many workers' homes were hit by bullets. Mrs. Ofil Guerrero and Maria Ortega, an 8-year old child, were wounded.

3--Such acts as these and plans to perpetrate other, similar vandalic acts have been shamelessly forecast by the U.S. press and news agencies.

4--It is public knowledge that plans are underway to carry out these aggressions from bases located in Florida, Puerto Rico, Central America, and other places, and that these bases are operated by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency.

5--The Central Intelligence Agency obtains detailed information on our military installations through the illegal flights of U-2 planes over Cuban national territory for the planning and conducting of these vandalic attacks.

6--Mr. Secretary General, the Cuban Revolutionary Government is sure that you are aware of the seriousness of these acts and of the consequences that they could have on peace.

7--The Cuban Revolutionary Government fulfills its duty in making these acts known to you, and through you to the United Nations and world opinion.

UIE PRESIDENT PLEDGES SUPPORT OF REVOLUTION

Havana PRENSA LATINA in Spanish 1200 GMT 14 May 1964--E (FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY)

(Excerpts) Havana--Zbynek Vokrouhliky, president of the International Students Union (UIE), told PRENSA LATINA that "Cuba is a second fatherland for any student endowed with a democratic, progressive, and revolutionary awareness." Vokrouhliky made the statement on his arrival in Havana, where he will confer with competent officials on the possibility of holding the Ninth World Youth and Student Festival in Cuba. He is accompanied by Jose Venegas and Pedro Romeo, UIE vice presidents.

Continuing his statement, Vokrouhliky stressed "the complete and unconditional support of the UIE for the Cuban revolution and the battle that the Cuban people are waging against the aggressions and provocations of Yankee imperialism." He went on to say that the UIE has distributed to all its national branches throughout the world copies of Fidel Castro's 19 April speech, which denounced the repeated U.S. aggressions against Cuba.

Referring to the possibility of holding the ninth festival in Cuba, the UIE president disclosed that the matter will be discussed with the leaders of Cuban youth and mass organizations in the spirit of Fidel Castro's offer--at the time of the last Helsinki festival--of Cuba as the headquarters of the ninth festival. He pointed out that the participation of the Cubans in the ninth festival is very important because its principal theme will be "the role of the youths and students in the fight for national liberation, national independence, and world peace."

Concerning the Cuban revolutionary process, he said that as president of the UIE, his interest is "centered on anything related to the reorganization of university life, student life in general, the people's education, and the literacy campaign. I am personally interested, for example, in the organization of the Revolutionary Defense Committees," he added, "because they can play an important role in a revolution, not only in Cuba but also in any country undergoing a revolutionary process. It is not only important to make a revolution, but also to defend and sustain it," he concluded.

CHINESE DELEGATE ON INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

(Excerpts) Havana--Chang Tien-lin, head of the Chinese delegation that participated in the May Day celebration in Havana on the invitation of the Cuban CTC-R, told PRENSA LATINA that "the workers and people of his country decidedly and resolutely support the fight of the Cuban people against U.S. imperialism. We also back the Cuban protests to the U.S. Government and U Thant on 20 and 23 April, respectively."

Referring to the Chinese newsmen and members of the trade delegation arrested and mistreated in Brazil, Chan asserted that the act "is a flagrant violation of the most elementary principles of international law." He said that the arrest "is part of the political plot that the U.S. Government and its Latin American puppets are hatching against the Chinese People's Republic."

A review of captioned publication was requested by Inspector [redacted]

Bureau files contain no derogatory information regarding the ICOJ. A news clipping from the Washington Daily News 1-4-57 describes the ICOJ as an unofficial group of 15 international lawyers from 15 nations. This news clipping indicated the ICOJ previously published two papers on the Russian intervention in Hungary which are described as classics in the interpretation of international law. The Commission describes itself, according to captioned publication, as a non-governmental organization which has Consultative Status with the United Nations Economic and Social Council. The list of members of the ICOJ includes [redacted] Southern District of New York, and immediate [redacted] of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York. We conducted DAPLI investigation of [redacted] in connection with his appointment as [redacted] and no derogatory information was developed. Other members of the ICOJ are listed as representatives of a number of other countries and biographical data indicates all have impressive legal backgrounds. b7C

Captioned publication, generally, is an indictment of the activities of the present revolutionary government of Cuba with regard to enforcement of law, handling of the Judiciary, and denial of civil and political liberty. The government of Fidel Castro is described as having moved, in less than four years of existence, from a moderate climate of democratic reform into the violent atmosphere of an extremist authoritarian regime. 2-46855

This book is divided into four parts. The first part is in the nature of background and deals with the social, economic, and political features of Cuba. It traces the deterioration of the Judiciary, the Castro regime. Efforts to reorganize the Judiciary, according to the democratic patterns of the Cuban 1940 Constitution, were opposed by those within the Castro regime who demanded a "popular judiciary according to the new aims of the Cuban Revolution." When Castro's popular militia was organized, this group took on the double function of magistrates and militia. UNRECORDED COPY FILED IN

Re: "CUBA AND THE RULE OF LAW"
PUBLISHED BY THE INTERNATIONAL
COMMISSION OF JURISTS (ICOJ),
GENEVA, 1962

Reforms put into effect by the Castro government deprived the Cuban Supreme Court of its original jurisdiction in constitutional questions as well as administrative functions regarding members of the Judiciary and its employees. A purge of the Cuban Judiciary resulted in the resignation or dismissal of many of the leading members of the Cuban courts.

On 8-21-61, the "socialist character of the new Cuban revolutionary justice" was announced. Judges were to be "active guardians of socialist legality" and to implement this trend, courses of "socialism" were organized largely for members of the Judiciary.

"Emergency" laws, which originally had applied to those who held posts of responsibility under Batista, were gradually extended to deal with any opposition to the Castro regime.

Part Two deals with the constitutional legislation of Cuba. The Cuban Constitution for the Republic was adopted July 8, 1940, and governed Cuba for twelve years. On 3-10-52 the constitution was suspended by Batista and at this time the 1940 Constitution became the banner under which the fight was carried out against Batista.

On 2-7-59 the 1940 Constitution was replaced by the Fundamental Law of the Castro government. Sixteen amendments to the Fundamental Law have been passed.

While the dogmatic part of Castro's Fundamental Law is practically the same as the 1940 Constitution, alterations in the text of the 1940 Constitution made the Fundamental Law the basis for the present totalitarian government in Cuba. All amendments to the Fundamental Law reveal their purpose as the concentration of arbitration power in the hands of the ruling group.

Part Three deals with criminal law in Cuba. The main trends, with regard to present substantive and procedural legislation regarding the current Cuban criminal law, are noted as follows:

(1) Retroactivity of criminal legislation may be applied to the detriment of the accused.

(2) The death sentence may be imposed for a variety of political offenses.

Re: "CUBA AND THE RULE OF LAW"
PUBLISHED BY THE INTERNATIONAL
COMMISSION OF JURISTS (ICOJ),
GENEVA, 1962

(3) Total confiscation of property may be ordered against political offenders by court sentence as well as in extra-judicial administrative proceedings.

(4) Those indicted for political offenses are deprived of the right of habeas corpus.

(5) Those indicted for political offenses are prevented from attacking the violation of guarantees contained in constitutional legislation before the Supreme Court of the land.

There follows an analysis of substantive criminal legislation under Castro. This analysis points out the expanding scope of acts punishable under revolutionary legislation, the vagueness of the concept of counterrevolutionary crimes, and the broad jurisdiction of the revolutionary tribunals with their extreme and brutally sudden penalties.

Part Four deals with statements taken by the ICOJ from witnesses and participants in the arena of revolutionary justice under the Castro regime. These accounts of alleged justice in Cuba under the present system leave no doubt that human dignity, human rights, the basic fundamentals of substantive and procedural law, have been brushed aside to suit totalitarian objectives and political aims of Castro and his followers.

U.S. Policy Toward Cuba

Foreign policies are rarely born full-armed like Minerva. More often they evolve in response to events and circumstances.

In such cases there is a danger that the assumptions on which policies are founded may become obscured.

This has happened to some extent with regard to our policy toward the present government of Cuba. Some of the public discussion that has surrounded that policy has involved misapprehensions on a number of fronts—misapprehensions as to the nature of the danger posed by the present and potential activities of the Castro government, misapprehensions as to the range of policies available to counter that danger, and misapprehensions as to the objectives that we can expect to accomplish by the policies employed.

We shall try to answer some of the questions that have arisen with regard to our Cuba policy and shall try to clarify some of the confusion that has been apparent in the public debate.

A MODERN MENACE

First, what is the nature of the threat imposed by the existence of a Communist regime in Cuba?

It is not, in our judgment, a military threat to the United States. We shall never permit it to menace our own strategic power, as our actions in October 1962 demonstrated. We are taking constant and effective measures to insure that such a threat does not occur again—and we shall continue to take those measures.

Nor do we regard Cuba as a direct military threat to Latin America. The Cuban armed forces are large and equipped with modern weaponry. They are by all odds the most powerful military establishment in Latin America. But Cuba does not possess air- and sealift sufficient to permit it to take offensive action against its neighbors, and, in any event, we maintain overwhelming military forces in the area to prevent Cuba from attacking other American Republics.

The menace of Castro Communism to Latin America is of a different and perhaps a more modern kind. It is the menace of subversion—the undermining of existing governments, the arming of organized Communist minorities, and the mounting of campaigns of sabotage and terror.

Some areas of Latin America are peculiarly vulnerable to such tactics. Vulnerability is greatest where social injustice is widely prevalent, where anachronistic societies remain dominated by small elites—tight little oligarchies that control the bulk of the productive wealth. In some places these oligarchies have only recently—and reluctantly—begun to make concessions to the insistent demands of the millions of economically submerged peoples for a measure of social justice and a decent standard of living.

For Latin America, as has been frequently remarked, is in the throes of a great transformation from a continent of backward societies to a continent of new, modern nations. During this period of change and tension, it offers a tempting target for the Communists. They are at least as conscious as we of the importance and weakness of the area. They are at least as determined as we to see that the brew produced by the Latin American ferment is to their liking. They have, therefore, regarded the establishment of a Communist government in Cuba—a Communist Latin American state at the very doorstep of the United States—as a major asset for Communism.

CASTRO'S BID FOR POWER

In their determination to establish a center of subversion for Latin America in Cuba, the Communists have found a natural lieutenant in Fidel Castro. Castro regards himself as the "liberator" of all Latin America. A born revolutionary, driven by a hunger for power and prestige, he looks upon the southern half of the American Continent as a proper field for the fulfillment of his ambitions. He seeks a revolutionary millennium in which the example of Cuba will have swept the continent, and his position of liberator and leader—not of the small island of Cuba, but of all Latin America—will have been assured.

This vision springs from his psychological and political needs. It is necessary to the man and equally to his followers, whose revolutionary enthusiasm must be constantly fed on the prospect of further advance beyond the confines of the island—an island which they look upon as the base from which the continent-wide revolution will be propagated by word and deed.

That Castro intends to extend Communist power, and that he is actively seeking to do so, have been clearly shown. The most recent and dramatic evidence is the three tons of arms sent from Cuba to Venezuelan Castroist insurgents. An investigating committee of the Organization of American States (OAS) was appointed to study all aspects of this case. It found that the evidence clearly substantiated the Venezuelan Government's charges of Cuban intervention and aggression. The committee's report provides the basis for further collective OAS action against Cuba, and the members are consulting now among themselves to determine the collective measures which should be taken.

TWO LINES OF STRATEGY

The United States, as the strongest nation in the Western Hemisphere, is faced with a difficult but practical problem. With the existence of a Communist center in Latin America, how do we and our Latin American allies prevent that center from being used as an active center for Communist infection?

The most obvious and direct way to eliminate the Castro regime in Cuba would be by direct military action designed to replace the present government by a non-Communist government friendly to the West. Less direct action might take the form of an enforced blockade—which would still be an act of war.

At the other end of the spectrum from military action is a policy of trying to negotiate with Castro. Taking account of the decisions reached within the American system, we have consistently maintained that two elements in the Cuban situation are not negotiable. First, Castro's political, economic, and military dependence upon the Soviets; and, second, the continuance of Castro's subversive activities in Latin America.

We see no present evidence that Castro is prepared to eliminate these two conditions—and, in fact, the evidence thus far is all the other way.

The limits within which the United States must erect a Cuban policy are, therefore, well defined and narrow. If, on the one hand, we do not wish to adopt policies that involve an act of war—and even the most vigorous critics of our Cuban policy have rejected this course of action—and, on the other, there seems little sign of a possibility of serious negotiation with the present regime, we are left with two principal lines of strategy for dealing with the menace of Castro's Cuba to Latin America:

First, we must take all possible measures to strengthen the Latin American nations so that they may, through individual and collective means, resist Communist subversion.

Second, we must employ all available instruments of power less than acts of war to limit or reduce the ability of the Cuban government to advance the Communist cause in Latin America through propaganda, sabotage, and subversion.

To the greatest extent possible, we are pursuing both these lines of strategy within the framework of the inter-American system. We have sought to make clear to our Latin American friends that the problem of protecting the continent against the menace of Castro Communism must be tackled by the American states as a collective undertaking. The Organization of American States is the principal instrumentality for this purpose, but we are also employing other multilateral groupings within the inter-American family.

In January 1962, the foreign ministers of the OAS formally found the Castro regime to be incompatible with the inter-American system and excluded it from further participation in that system. The foreign ministers also approved the immediate suspension of trade with Cuba in arms and war material.

In early October 1962, the foreign ministers of the OAS informally met to consider the problems arising from growing Sino-Soviet intervention in Cuba, particularly the attempt to convert the island into an armed base for Communist subversive penetration of the hemisphere. In their conclusions, the foreign ministers pointed out:

1. The need for the American Republics and all other independent countries to review their policies on trade with Cuba, including the use of their ships in the Cuban trade;
2. The importance of intensifying measures against Communist subversion;
3. The desirability of keeping a careful check on the delivery of arms to Cuba; and
4. The need for special studies of the transfer of funds for subversive purposes, the flow of subversive propaganda, and the utilization of Cuba as a base for training in subversive techniques.

The Council of the OAS subsequently directed the preparation of a special study on measures for controlling funds, propaganda, and training for subversive purposes. The Council sent the report, incorporating specific and general recommendations in these three fields, to member governments in July 1963 urging that the recommended measures be carried out promptly.

Meanwhile, in April 1963, the five Central American Republics, together with Panama and the United States, undertook a cooperative effort to safeguard the Caribbean area against Cuban subversive activities. At that meeting, and at a subsequent second meeting in January 1964, the cooperating countries agreed on a series of measures to increase the security of the countries of the area. The program includes the control of subversive travel, funds, and propaganda, the strengthening of security organizations, and the improvement of communications between national security agencies.

Following its own investigation of the recently discovered Venezuelan arms cache, the OAS is now studying additional measures for dealing with Cuba as a base of subversion and for policing Cuban-supported activities in Latin America.

These cooperative actions by the American states have shown considerable success. In order to control movement to and from Cuba for subversive purposes, many Latin American governments have instituted procedures for restricting travel by their nationals to Cuba. As a result of these measures only 50 percent as many Latin Americans were able to travel to Cuba during 1963 as during the preceding year.

We continue to work with individual governments to help them improve the ability of their police and armed forces to deal with terrorism and insurgency. The United States and Latin American governments are also cooperating with increasing effectiveness in exchanging intelligence on Castroist subversion activities and in improving communications between their security services.

THE ALLIANCE FOR PROGRESS

In the long run, however, Latin America will be rendered immune to Communist infection only by an amelioration of the conditions—political, economic, and social—in which subversion flourishes. The United States and the free nations of Latin America have, therefore, through the Alliance for Progress, undertaken a major collective effort. It is directed at the ambitious target of transforming the structure and productive capacity of the Latin American nations so as to bring about not merely an increase but a more equitable distribution of resources.

Given the magnitude of this undertaking, it will be years before major results can be achieved. But until such a transformation is accomplished, Latin America will remain a fertile seedbed for Communist subversion.

PROGRAM OF ECONOMIC DENIAL

By strengthening the Latin American nations through collective political, economic, and military measures we are increasing their ability to resist subversion. But at the same time we must actively pursue measures against Cuba to limit its ability to subvert.

In this effort we are exploiting the propaganda potential to the fullest. But an information program must be regarded primarily as a supplement to substantive policies. Given the present limits of action, we must rely, as our major instrument, on a systematic program of economic denial.

This is the only policy—short of the use of force—that gives promise of having a significant impact on Cuba and its continuance as a Communist base in the Western Hemisphere.

Such a program, in our judgment, can and does work effectively to achieve objectives that are in the manifest interest not only of the United States and Latin America but of other free-world nations.

In discussing the effectiveness of this program, let us make one point quite clear. We have never contended that a program of economic denial—short of an act of war such as a military blockade that would cut off bloc as well as free-world trade—is likely by itself to bring down the present Cuban regime.

The objectives which this program can accomplish are more limited. They are four in number:

First—and most important—to demonstrate to the peoples of the American Republics that Communism has no future in the Western Hemisphere;

Second, to make plain to the people of Cuba and to elements of the power structure of the regime that the present regime cannot serve their interests;

Third, to reduce the will and ability of the present Cuban regime to export subversion and violence to the other American states;

Fourth, to increase the cost to the Soviet Union of maintaining a Communist outpost in the Western Hemisphere.

Those are the objectives which we seek to achieve by a program of economic denial against Cuba. That program reflects the purpose of the Organization of American States. In our opinion, it is realistically designed to accomplish the limited but nonetheless important objectives toward which it is directed.

EFFECTIVENESS OF THE DENIAL PROGRAM

Economic denial is a weapon that must be used with great selectivity. It can never be more effective than the economic circumstances of the target country. A program of general economic denial against the Soviet Union, for example, would in the long run make little sense, since the Soviet Union imports from the free world only about one-half of 1 percent of its gross national product.

But Cuba presents a wholly different situation. It is a small island with meager natural resources and a low level of industrial development. Prior to the Castro regime, its imports from the free world—principally the United States—represented more than 30 percent of its gross national product.

Those imports were the vital elements of its economic prosperity. They consisted principally of industrial goods and equipment, fuel, raw materials, and food-stuffs.

Cuba's industrial installations, its power plants, its sugar mills, its transportation equipment are all of Western origin. After 5 years Cuba's industrial plant is obsolete and rapidly deteriorating. With no continuing supply of spare parts, it has resorted to cannibalizing its existing equipment.

In addition, Cuba has become far more exposed and vulnerable to economic pressure because Castro's internal policies have driven into exile several hundred thousand Cubans—the managerial and professional elite. There is now a great shortage of skills, and much of the equipment in the industrial plant is mishandled. This situation has been further aggravated by management decisions taken on ideological, rather than economic, grounds.

Cuba is, therefore, vulnerable to a policy of economic denial. Its vulnerability is well illustrated by what has happened to the Cuban economy since trade with the West was first restricted. Today the Cuban standard of living is some 20 percent below pre-Castro levels. Many essential items are rationed and many imported items, such as fresh fruits and canned goods, have almost disappeared. The Cuban people are allowed two bars of soap per person per month, three pounds of meat per person per month, and six ounces of coffee per person per month—when they can get them.

Industrial output, which accounts for less than 25 percent of the gross national product, has remained stagnant. Quality has frequently been sacrificed to maintain the volume of production. In many industries output is shoddy, centralized operations inefficient, and labor productivity extremely low, in large part because of lack of morale and incentive. Plants and machinery are often idle because of a lack of spare parts or raw materials, and breakdowns in water, power, and transport exacerbate the general disorganization.

Cuban sugar production—the basis of the entire economy—has fallen drastically. Last year's production of 3.8 million tons was the lowest since the early 1940's, and the crop for this year will probably be near the same figure.

With the curtailment of free-world trade, exports have fallen drastically—from more than $800 million in 1958 to less than $500 million in 1963. The lines of trade have been completely redrawn. In 1958 substantially all imports came from free-world sources; last year 85 percent came from the Communist bloc.

It is perhaps pertinent to point out that Cuban exports to Latin America fell from $24 million in 1953 to an estimated $8 million in 1962, while Latin American exports to Cuba fell from $78 million in 1958 to an estimated $6.7 million in 1962.

ALLIED COOPERATION

In order to exploit Cuba's economic vulnerability we have developed programs of common action on two levels:

First, to restrict the availability of free-world shipping to Cuba;

Second, to limit the categories of goods that may be available to Cuba.

In order to make these policies effective, we have sought the cooperation of the other major industrialized countries of the free world, and particularly our NATO allies. We have obtained considerable, although not complete, cooperation.

For example, the number of calls by free-world vessels at Cuban ports dropped 60 percent in 1963 as compared to 1962, and there are reasonable prospects that, over 1964 as a whole, there will be a further drop.

Realistically, we must recognize that the restriction of free-world shipping, while useful, is of only limited utility. Shipping under the control of the bloc could transport the goods that Cuba requires, although at the cost of a considerable reorganization and disruption of schedules and charters.

Much more important is the denial of those categories of goods that are most vital to the operation of the Cuban economy. This includes industrial goods, transport equipment, and critical materials. Not only is Cuba wholly dependent on a large and continuing import of consumer goods if it is to maintain more than a subsistence economy, but its limited industrial plant, including the sugar industry, is based on Western equipment that is rapidly becoming worn out and obsolete and on Western transport equipment that is rapidly falling apart. It is important, therefore, that the West should not bolster the economy by providing spare parts and replacements.

This was the reason, for example, that the United States took such a strong position against the recent sale of 450 buses to the Castro government—400 of which are to be used in Havana. Those 400 additional buses will almost double available public transport in the city that dominates Cuba's economic life. Without those buses the efficiency of the Cuban economy and the level of Cuban morale would be further impaired.

The sale of Western locomotives to Cuba could have an even greater impact. Movement of sugar to Cuban ports is almost entirely by rail, and the motive power of the Cuban railroad system is presently in a critical state of disrepair. In a late-1963 description of the "desperate state" of the railroad system, a Cuban official organ estimated that only one-quarter as many locomotives were then in operating condition as in 1959. To replace even a part of this equipment would be a very big boon to the Cuban economy.

A MISLEADING COMPARISON

The position of our Government in seeking to prevent the sale of such heavy equipment to the Cuban regime has, unfortunately, not always been fully understood either in the United States or by some of our friends abroad. The question has frequently been confused by the curious contention that the sale of United States wheat to the Soviet Union somehow justifies the sale of critical supplies to Cuba. Such an argument betrays a misunderstanding of the nature and objectives of the program of economic denial.

As mentioned above, the continent-wide economy of the Soviet Union, which in many ways approaches self-sufficiency, is far less vulnerable to economic denial than that of Cuba. There would be no point in trying to influence Soviet strength or Soviet policy by a general effort to deny exports to that country. All that has ever been attempted is a selective program of denying access primarily to strategic goods.

The United States has long had a modest trade in agricultural products with the Soviet Union. The special aspect of the wheat sale was its unusual size and character. The Soviet Union has been traditionally an exporter of wheat, and before approaching the United States it had already contracted the bulk of its wheat import requirements from Canada and Australia. Purchases from the United States were, from the Soviet point of view, marginal. Even the 2½ million tons originally discussed would have totaled only about 3½ percent of normal Soviet bread grain production.

Under these circumstances it is quite clear that the sale of wheat to the Soviet Union involved considerations quite unrelated to those involved in the denial of economic goods and other capital equipment to Cuba. Thus any sale of wheat to the Soviet Union was not of great importance to the Soviet economy and was of slight importance to the food stocks of the Soviet people. But our denial of industrial and transport equipment and spare parts to Cuba can mean a serious impairment in the state of the Cuban economy.

Oddly enough, these two quite distinct questions have been confused, sometimes deliberately, by people holding quite disparate views: by those in Europe who would like to find an excuse to sell heavy equipment to Cuba, and by those in America who would like to find a basis for attacking the wheat sale. An objective comparison of these two situations reveals the emptiness of the argument.

TO THE PEOPLE OF CUBA

These in brief are the bases for our policy toward Cuba and the reasons why we are seeking—and shall continue to seek—to limit the supply of critical goods to the Cuban economy.

This program is directed at the present Cuban government. It will be continued so long as that government persists in its efforts to subvert and undermine the free societies of Latin America.

Within recent weeks it has become more than ever apparent that our program is succeeding. Cuba under Communism is providing a spectacle of economic failure for all to see. Far from offering a better life for the Cuban people, Communism is bringing only depression and want.

Today the Cuban economy is in a mess—a mess produced by incompetent management, ideological interference, and the refusal of the United States and many other Western societies to deal with a government that is seeking to undermine its neighbors.

The magnitude of the Cuban economic failure is clearly apparent in the constant complaints of the present Cuban leaders.

But if our program of economic denial is helping to accentuate the failures of the Cuban economy, let it be clearly understood that it is not aimed at the Cuban people. The United States has no quarrel with the people of Cuba. It feels no animosity, only sympathy and sorrow. We have shown our good will by exempting food and medicines from the restrictions imposed on our trade with Cuba. We have never sought in any way to starve the Cuban people.

We are confident that the people of Cuba will not always be compelled to suffer under Communist tyranny. Yet only when they achieve freedom and democracy, will they be able to develop the high potential of their country for economic and social progress.

And so we oppose the present Cuban regime not just because its ambitions menace our hemispheric neighbors. We oppose it, above all, because its standards of conduct and its tyrannical practices condemn the Cuban people to misery and fear.

The Cuban people deserve better than that.

UNRECORDED COPY FILED IN 105-127624-1

LA 109-34

On 4/7/64, [REDACTED] b7C
[REDACTED] First Federal Savings and Loan Association, advised SA [REDACTED] that [REDACTED] opened an account on 9/14/62 with the amount of $175.
His residence was shown as the Seaview Hotel, Room 239. A later residence of [REDACTED] and a still later residence of [REDACTED] was shown. Balance of the account as of 4/7/64 was $2,754. [REDACTED] advised that [REDACTED] gets $600 every three months. [REDACTED] stated [REDACTED] has told him that this is from his brother who lives in New York. [REDACTED] requested the bank to receive and hold personal mail for him at the bank, which the bank tried to refuse to do but [REDACTED] made such a commotion in the lobby of the bank they agreed to accommodate him. [REDACTED] comes in once a week and picks up his mail. The bank also has received telegrams for [REDACTED]. [REDACTED] stated he understood that [REDACTED] had lived in New York City in the past. The bank has no current residence or employment for [REDACTED]. [REDACTED] does not know [REDACTED] to have a car since he has never asked to have a parking ticket validated.

[REDACTED] described [REDACTED] as follows: b7C

Age	Late 30's
Height	6'
Weight	225-pounds
SSN	[REDACTED]
Hair	Black
Characteristics	Usually wears Marine type cap, wrap around sun glasses, Khaki pants, print shirt, is very obnoxious

[REDACTED] stated he always has appeared at the bank alone and he can recall that [REDACTED] had stated he recently came back from an extensive trip. [REDACTED] also stated that some of [REDACTED] actions are strange in that on March 25, [REDACTED] withdrew $400 from his account in four separate $100 checks payable to himself. [REDACTED] said this is strange because usually a person would just withdraw $400 in cash with just one check for $400. b7C

Negative checks concerning [REDACTED] have been conducted as follows:

b7C

[REDACTED] stated the Cuban G-2 has a large office b2/b7D on Serafin Garcia Street, between Maceo and Colon, in Santa Clara, and their large main G-2 station is located on the exit of the Central Highway from Santa Clara, about three miles out, in the direction of Camaguey.

STUBBORN OPPOSITION IN LAS VILLAS

[REDACTED] stated Las Villas is of great strategic b2/b7D importance to Cuba. It is the center of the island geographically, and is the center of railroad communications between east and west and north and south. It is also a central city for all communications, and for the warehousing of sugar and other products.

Las Villas, and especially the capital of Santa Clara, has an extremely high percentage of rebellious individuals who are the most difficult in Cuba to control.

[REDACTED] stated that when as many as four or five individuals b2/b7D organize into a band of resistance, the Cuban G-2 will order from two thousand to five thousand men from the armed forces to capture or kill the individuals involved, and a relentless campaign of search and terror follows until the individuals are captured or shot.

COMPLAINTS AND POOR ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

██████████ stated the above are directly related to each other, and the poor economic conditions are directly responsible for much of the stubborn resistance in Las Villas to the Castro regime. b2/b7D

██████████ stated that in June, some of the sugar mills were still grinding, whereas the normal end of the harvest would have occurred in April. The reasons for the delay have been several. The mills are old and replacement parts are scarce, so that repairs require more time. There have been delays in the cutting of cane, due to the lack of enthusiasm on the part of "volunteer workers." Transportation of the cut cane to the mill has presented real problems, because of insufficient trucks, and ██████████ stated he had seen military trucks pressed into service to haul the cane to the sugar mills. The mills are actually running at far below production, and it is now prohibited for the mills to post, or report publicly, the production, which was formerly the custom in Cuba. This is assumed, by the observers in the sugar industry, to be for the purpose of allowing the government to lower or raise its figures on sugar production without the actual Cuban population, and much less anyone outside of Cuba, being aware of the real sugar production. b2/b7D

RE: FOREIGN POLITICAL MATTERS - CUBA.

Any farmer who appears to have some knowledge about sugar cane and sugar cane growing is drafted, and he will either render assistance or he will not eat. The pressure put on by the government in this field may improve sugar cane production, but the improvement of the cattle herds which have been dissipated by indiscriminate slaughtering of cows and immature beef have produced such a scarcity that there is no chance of the availability of meat becoming better in the foreseeable future.

██████████ stated that it is not necessary to listen in order to hear soldiers and militia members complaining on the streets about the poor food they are furnished in the armed forces. The principal complaint concerns the total lack of fresh beef, pork, and chicken. The soldiers complain as loudly as the civilian population about the Russian canned meat, which they seem to find completely unacceptable, and is openly referred to by them as "garbage." b2/b7D

General food conditions are extremely bad in the Province of Las Villas. One small bar of soap per person per month is the ration, when available. Three ounces of meat per week is the ration book quota, and the black market thrives at fantastic prices. Principal items sold on the black market are pork, chicken, and eggs. Beef is rarely sold, since, if caught, the black market seller, as well as the purchaser, are sure to receive at least five-year sentences.

██████████ stated despite the severe persecution and the large number of soldiers assigned to capture and b2/b7D eliminate any small band of resistance, the above deplorable conditions are constantly driving more and more Cubans in the Las Villas Province to form such resistance bands. Las Villas is crossed by the Escambray Mountains, and there are numerous hills and mountainous regions where pursuit of the anti-Castro rebels is extremely difficult, and Castro is not now able to count on the cooperation and support of the Cuban farmers as he did in the first years of his regime.

COMANDOS 'L'
(LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA)

Radio Station KMPC, Los Angeles, California, during its noon news broadcast on July 20, 1964, announced that a Cuban refugee group (unnamed) planned to demonstrate in front of the Mexican Consulate in downtown Los Angeles at 7:30 p.m. that same date in protest against the refusal of the Mexican Government to agree with proposed sanctions against the present Cuban Government.

A source, who has furnished reliable information in the past and who is acquainted with some Cuban activities in the Los Angeles area, advised on July 21, 1964, that about four hundred Cuban refugees reportedly demonstrated for about ninety minutes in front of the Mexican Consulate at 354 South Spring Street, Los Angeles on July 20, 1964, the demonstration having been arranged by "Comandos 'L'", [REDACTED] in Los Angeles. The source added that the demonstration received radio and newspaper coverage, an article entitled, "Mexico Urged to Ban Castro" having appeared in the "Los Angeles Herald - Examiner" newspaper dated July 21, 1964, which mentioned that, according to a spokesman for the demonstrating group, the demonstration had been planned as a protest against Mexico's refusal to join with 17 other American nations in considering sanctions against the Castro regime at the meeting of the Organization of American States, in coordination with which it had been timed.

SUBJECT: THE CUBAN SITUATION

Reference is made to memorandum W. R. Wannall to W. C. Sullivan in captioned matter dated July 17, 1964. Therein it is recommended and approved that Liaison discuss with State Department the possibility of expediting a trip by [redacted] to Havana, Cuba. [redacted]

As was pointed out in referenced memorandum, [redacted] has cooperated with the Legat, Mexico, and this trip would place her in a position to furnish valuable data concerning the Cuban situation. [redacted]

Liaison Representative [redacted] discussed this matter with [redacted] Intelligence and Research, State Department, on July 21, 1964. [redacted] advised Liaison July 24, 1964, that, following his discussion with Liaison, State had instituted approval for such a visit on the part of [redacted] and the Embassy at Mexico City had been so advised and would make the necessary arrangements. [redacted] further advised that State, prior to our contact, had ruled adversely with regard to an earlier request by [redacted] for permission to visit Cuba. [redacted]

The Research-Satellite Section is appropriately advising the Legal Attache, Mexico City.

[REDACTED] has been acting as a source in Cuban matters for Legat, Mexico, since February, 1963. Through his cooperation, Legat has also been able to interview [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] Legat advises that [REDACTED] has been most cooperative in arranging appointments [REDACTED] and when originally consulted concerning possibility of visits to Cuba by [REDACTED] Legat placed her in touch with the U. S. Embassy official [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] Legat feels she would be in a position to pick up valuable data concerning the Cuban situation if she does make the trip.

We have had previous experience with this type travel and know that, if State Department officials approve, the U. S. Embassy in Mexico City can arrange with the Mexican Government to expedite visits to and from Cuba and State probably can clear all obstacles concerning the visit except issuance of the Cuban visa which normally is handled by the Czechs when U. S. visitors are involved. In any event, there probably would be little trouble concerning her returning from Cuba, [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] Since we do not want to miss any opportunity to gather intelligence data from inside Cuba, it is felt we should at least bring the situation to State Department's attention for its consideration. We have no prior record of [REDACTED]
